Bio

Elizabeth Klorer is from St. Louis, Missouri and currently lives and studies in Chicago. She is an interdisciplinary artist who works with found objects and textiles, fashion, sculpture, video, and writing. She is originally a self taught seamstress who designs and sews made-to-order clothes out of second-hand materials, which she has been developing her skills with for the past 5 years.

Her belief in sustainable design and restoration intersects throughout the different fields of her practice. Elizabeth's work centers around bringing care and respect to objects, and the belief that clothing is part of an interactive narrative in all of our lives. Elizabeth's work is at its core an interest in language and communication, and the stories that are created and perceived.
